1 General Information

The National Association of Unclaimed Property Administrators (NAUPA) has created this reporting format to make electronic reporting more uniform. Two earlier NAUPA formats have been supported and endorsed, first in the 1990s and then 2000s. They have been modified over the years. This most recent version has revised data elements, descriptions, and codes for clarity and to receive the best information to allow states to find owners. The format has moved from the fixed width format to Extensible Markup Language (XML).

Note: When using the NAUPA format to report, do not mix and match which version is used. Check with the jurisdictions in which you will report to determine which version(s) of the NAUPA layout is accepted.

The purpose of this document is to assist all parties with understanding the general layout structure and identifying all the various data elements and codes. Included with this document is an XML Schema Definition (XSD). The XSD provides specific guidance on how to create and test your final XML file before sending it to the appropriate Unclaimed Property jurisdiction. The XSD file contains logic which allows an associated XML file to be validated, to ensure that the data has been entered and is in the proper format. For example, if the XSD requires that a particular field contain a dollar amount, the presence of non-numeric characters will generate an error.

In addition to the XSD each state may have additional reporting requirements. NAUPA encourages you to check with each Unclaimed Property jurisdiction if they have any additional requirements or verification that will be performed.

2 XML Structure

XML is a language used for storing and transporting data. XML can be read and processed by computers but can also be human-readable. Tags label, categorize, and organize information in a specific way. A tag for a specific data element is placed between angle brackets (< >).

There are two types of tags: starting tags, which identify the starting point for the tagged data and ending tags, which denote the end point. The ending tag for a particular starting tag has a forward slash added to the beginning. Here is a sample XML tag for a Name data element, or field:

Note: XML tags cannot contain spaces, and it is generally considered a best practice to use camel case for tag names.

```
<Name>John Smith</Name>

XML also permits tags to be embedded within each other to denote hierarchical or related data. Here is a more complex example of an XML representation of some data about a particular person:

```
<Person>
    <Name>John Smith</Name>
    <PhoneNumber>
        <HomeNumber>506 555 3555</HomeNumber>
        <MobileNumber>506 555 7653</MobileNumber>
    </PhoneNumber>

</Person>
The specific type of data to be contained between defined tags can be specified in a separate XSD file. This makes it possible to ensure that data transmitted by XML is of the valid type, thereby making it easier for the recipient to process the file correctly.

Below is a link to an example NAUPA-III XML file that conforms to the NAUPA-III XML schema.

3 Notation

This section describes some of the notation used in the following XML element descriptions.

3.1 Mandatory-If Known-Either

The M/K/E notation specifies whether an element must appear at a particular location in the XML or not.

Appearance Status	Notation	Meaning
Mandatory	M	The element must appear at least once at the specified location in the XML document. The absence of the element will trigger a schema validation error and would indicate an invalid NAUPA report that cannot be processed.
If Known	K	The element is optional within the XML structure. If present, it must be at the specified location within the XML, but its absence does not trigger a schema validation error.
Either	E/M	Either the named element may appear, OR another adjacent “E” element (i.e., in a row above or below the current one) may appear. One of the elements must appear.

3.2 Repeat

The Repeat notation specifies how many times an element may appear at its defined location within the XML. It is related to the M/K/E notation but adds information about how many times an element may appear if it is allowed to repeat.

Repeat	Notation	Meaning
Exactly One	1	The element must appear exactly once at the specified location in the XML document. The absence of the element will trigger a schema validation error and would indicate an invalid NAUPA report that cannot be processed.
One or More, Bounded	1..N	The element must appear at least once, and may repeat up to N times, where N is a fixed number.
One or More, Unbounded	1..*	The element must appear at least once and may repeat an unlimited number of times.
Zero or More, Bounded	0..N	The element may be absent, or may appear up to N times, where N is a fixed number.

Zero or More, Unbounded	0..*	The element may be absent or may appear an unlimited number of times.

3.3 Element Type

The type of an element may be a structural type that contains other sub-elements, or it may be a data type that places restrictions on the data contained between the element's start and end tags. Structural element types are known as "complex types" in XML schema terminology, and data element types are known as "simple types."

In an XML schema document, a structural or data type may be defined explicitly and given a name, or it may be defined in-line and remain nameless (we will call this an "anonymous" data type herein). Named data types are reusable and may be referenced anywhere within a schema document, but anonymous ones can be used only at the point of their definition. The XML schema syntax for both named and anonymous data types is lengthy and difficult to read, so the following abbreviated data type notations are used in this document.

The Type column in the following element definition tables can either use the above notation or be a link to a named or anonymous structural or data type. By convention, links to an anonymous type use a section number (e.g. Section 4.1), and links to a named type use the assigned name from the XML schema (e.g. ContactType).

Type	Notation	Meaning
Variable-length string	string(0..N) string(0..) string(M..N) string(M..) string(M..N): pattern	Variable-length string values with upper and lower bounds. A lower bound of zero means the string can be empty, and an upper bound of * means there is no limit on how long the string can be. Strings with the "pattern" notation match regular expression patterns as defined in the XML schema standard.
Fixed-length string	string(N)	Fixed-length string containing N characters.
Decimal number	decimal(M,N)	A decimal number that has a maximum of M digits and a precision of N decimal places.
Integer	integer(N)	An integer that has a maximum of N digits.
